Re: 2026 Buck Test Results

Greetings WV Buck Test Participants,

2026 was another great year for our test and we are consistently blown away by the support and participation of so many Kiko goat breeders across the US. This year we had 187 bucks on test and for the first time we offered two age divisions to accommodate winter (Dec-Jan) spring (Feb-March) born bucks.

This was a tough year for the test, between drought conditions early to coccidia issues your bucks were really put through the proverbial ringer. Throughout the test, we did lose 9 bucks to a variety of different “goat-related” incidents and had to remove 3 goats from the test for health reasons. Nonetheless, our death loss of 4.8% and an off-test loss of 1.6% in a challenging environment is exceptional. Overall, 6.4% of submitted goats were removed and 93.6% of goats made it to the end of the test.

The success of our program is based on vast producer participation but strengthened by the staff and students that operate this program. Ty Judy at the Willowbend Ag Innovation Center runs our day-to-day management of the goats and does a fantastic job. He was supported again this year by Meghan Byers – our student extraordinaire – who does an incredible job of managing your goats. My other graduate student, Taryn Chima, along with Eric Nestor and Hannah Maxwell were the reason that fecal exams were done so quickly. I must recognize the extra effort that Eric does in communicating with you and being a hub and information resource.

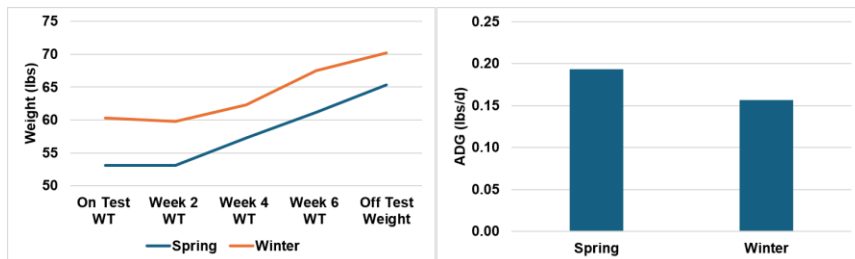

Hopefully you found our data reporting to be fun and interactive. Admittedly I could have been a little faster getting data out to you all, however, I hope that you found the interface to provide you more information as the test was progressing and were able to utilize the custom graphs to generate results that helped you visualize how your goats were performing.

On the following pages you’ll find data for the overall index which ranks goats based on REA, ADG and FEC. The index weighting is assigned as follows: 30% for ADG, 30% for REA and 40% for FEC. The final index should be a reasonable estimate of goats that have superiority across these three traits. However, vast superiority in one trait can cancel poor performance in another so approach interpretation with caution. Also remember that this index does not tell you anything about soundness, phenotype, or fertility.

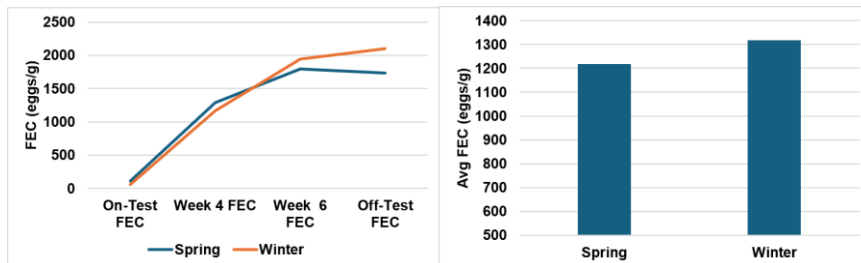

Thanks for your continued participation in our performance test and we sincerely hope that these data are useful in your operations – see you next year!

Data Explanation:

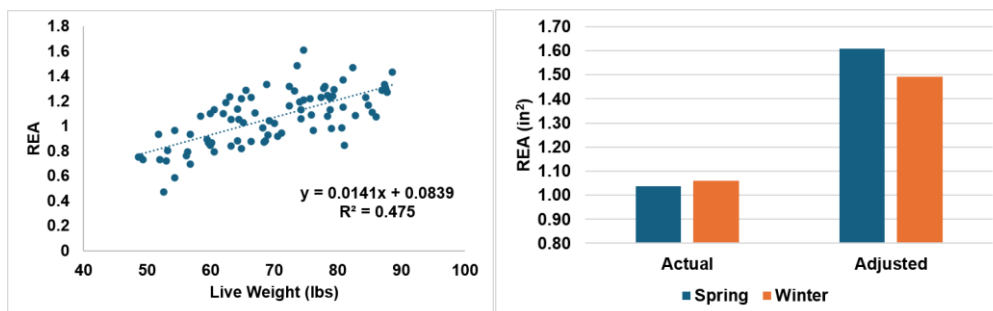

Average Daily Gain (ADG): Is the difference between off-test weight and on-test weight, divided by 63 days and is reported in lbs/d. Below are the trends observed in live weight gain on average of goats on test this year. Gain was a little lower than previous years and was slightly lower in older goats as they are reaching the peak of their growth curve and beginning to deposit fat.

Fecal egg count (FEC): When the test began, all bucks were administered 5,000 Haemonchus contortus larvae and FEC were collected every two weeks until the test completion. We skipped the week 2 report as no fecal sample could be collected on greater than 40 goats due to the diarrhea conditions in those bucks. The average FEC was calculated for each goat for the 4 samples that were collected and a significant infection was seen this year. Below are data that reflect the trend in the different divisions over time and their final average.

Rib eye area (REA): Is a measurement of the loin muscle taken ultrasonically between the 12th and 13th rib and is an estimate of overall carcass muscling. This value is adjusted to 100 lbs of live weight to remove the bias of weight on REA. In the graph on the left you can see there is a clear correlation between REA and live weight. The slope of the line is used to adjust the actual REA and calculated for each division separately.

Overall Index: $I = (0.3 \times \text{ADG ratio}) + (0.3 \times \text{REA ratio}) + (0.4 \times \text{FEC ratio})$
